Description of Program Service One

The Rainforest Alliance works around the globe to create standards that help people protect biodiversity and offer economic opportunities to populations in need. We work primarily in the forestry, agriculture, and tourism sectors, but also in educating consumers and training the media to be more effective advocates of conservation.

Over the last four centuries, half of the world's forests have been cleared. In response to this significant loss, the Rainforest Alliance pioneered forestry certification in 1989 with the launch of SmartWood, the first global sustainable forestry certification program. To encourage market-driven, environmentally and socially sound management of forests, tree farms, and forest resources, we issue a seal of approval to operations that follow strict standards for sustainability. SmartWood certification guarantees consumers that any forest product – whether it's a guitar, a bookcase or raw lumber—comes from a forest or tree farm managed to conserve biodiversity and ensure the rights of workers and local people. Our management standards require selective cutting practices, the protection of wildlife habitat, the conservation of biological resources and the minimization of damage to the forest during harvesting. To date, we have certified more than 34 million acres in 50 countries around the world.

To integrate productive agriculture, biodiversity conservation and human development, we developed our Sustainable Agriculture program. After it significantly reduced its use of herbicides, invested in recycling and provided its workers with improved training, housing, health benefits and education, ten years ago we certified our first banana farm. Today, we also stamp our seal of approval on well-managed coffee, cocoa, citrus and cut-flower and fern farms. Through collaboration with farmers, scientists and activists involved in our Sustainable Agriculture Network – a consortium of nine leading conservation groups in Latin America – we are sowing the seeds of change.

Through certification and training, we help land users and businesses produce goods and provide services according to practices that will not deplete resources or negatively impact local communities. The availability of certified products gives consumers the choice to “vote with their dollars” – to influence the corporate commitment to sustainability.

The Rainforest Alliance is also working with other organizations and experts worldwide to develop best management practices for sustainable tourism that help tourism suppliers and consumers effectively contribute to biodiversity conservation and social welfare. As an initial step towards forming an international accreditation body for certifying sustainable tourism operations, we launched the Sustainable Tourism

Network of the Americas, which helps tour operators, governments, civic organizations and travelers share information on benefits and standards for sustainable tourism.

The Rainforest Alliance's success is predicated on the partnerships we establish with local conservation groups and communities around the globe. We collaborate with partner groups in the development of our standards and train them to perform certification assessments. In an effort to change land use practices in biodiversity rich areas, we partner with international conservation organizations and undertake strategic alliances with companies to ensure that their practices are environmentally, socially and economically sustainable.

Worldwide, we work closely with industry leaders, journalists, conservation colleagues and government officials, and we reach tens of thousands of concerned consumers, children, parents and teachers through our publications, special events and Web site (www.rainforest-alliance.org). Our virtual reference library, the Eco-Index (www.eco-index.org), helps conservationists and scientists North and South share information and insights. To ensure the success of conservation initiatives around the world, we train journalists overseas on sustainable development reporting. We have also developed an online, multilingual curriculum for elementary school students in order to educate the leaders of tomorrow about global conservation.
